My experience:

I've always had mixed experiences with pair programming. When pair programming has worked well, I knew exactly what my partner was capable of and how dedicated they were. Jesse seemed to be a fairly effective programmer, but it made me grind my teeth to watch him struggle with the IDE. However, he was far better at writing correct code than I was. Unfortunately, this led to several stalls and arguments where ideas that I tried wouldn't work with our code base. We ended up writing ugly, long hard coded stuff and we tested last for some reason.

Despite all of the arguing and frustration, Jesse somehow kept himself collected while my frustration kept me from understanding and solving the problem. Once again, I cannot say that I am satisfied with the result of roughly 16 hours of work. I did not have a good experience.

That said, it's not Jesse's fault. I just can't seem to make myself comfortable working with others.
